Northwestern Inaugurates New President

Probably the inaugural address is always something of a mutual ordeal. Some have suggested that it would be better to speak in retrospect after a record of significant achievement. There is much to commend such procedure. What it overlooks is the importance of anticipation in human experience. When there is change in administrative responsibilities those likely to be affected by it want to know whether to expect twilight or the dawn of a greater day.

What qualities must we, a liberal arts college firmly rooted in the historic Christian faith, develop and maintain if we are to provide an education that is relevant to our times, of good quality, and is an education which meets our present needs and those of the future?

The free Christian college, the college which is deeply committed and determinedly open, best expresses, I believe, the mission of the church in higher education. For Northwestern College to achieve this stance will be a worthy fulfillment of the vision of those pioneers who dreamed and sacrificed to build a school which would keep faith and learning in dynamic relationship. This is no simple undertaking. It is achieved neither by fiat nor by pious declaration of intent. The college which seeks to be Christian in the deepest sense and open in the broadest sense chooses to live on the razor's edge; for it deliberately sets out to walk where the church and the secular academic community confront one another, a meeting ground of chronic, often bitter, tension.

Commitment is one of the indispensable pillars of the "free Christian" college. But commitment atrophies unless exercised meaningfully and compassionate in response to human inquiry and human needs. Openness, i.e., intelligent receptivity toward the words and works of men whether Christian or not, is as necessary for sound education as it is for a properly understood commitment.

The key to achieving such a college is not merely an official statement of faith and purpose replete with theological orthodoxy. Neither is it merely in required attendance at chapel nor a substantial graduation requirement in the Bible Department. The real key, I believe, to the "free Christian" college we have described is its teachers. Probably the most important task of any college is to discover able teachers in sufficient number and then encourage and help make possible their fullest professional development.

In summary, the requirements for a Christian college are: an alert faculty which is committed to Christian living and learning together in mutual respect and affection, a campus context which seeks to balance Christian commitment with openness to all serious ideas, and a Church and college which are joined together through mutual trust in the task of providing students with a quality liberal education. This is the college we seek to be.

Can we do these things? We must!

If we do, Northwestern will play an important part in steering this turbulent age, so ripe with possibility, into the dawn of a greater age. In so doing we would fulfill for our day the vision of the dauntless, devoted pioneers who founded this school.

We must not, and with God's help, we will not fail.

—from Dr. Lars Granberg's inaugural address
CALL TO GRANBERG

In a special session on July 20, 1966, the Board of Trustees extended a unanimous call to Dr. Lars I. Granberg to the Office of the President of Northwestern College. When Dr. Granberg accepted the call, he was serving as Acting Vice-President for Academic Affairs at Hope College, Holland, Michigan.

A native of Norway, Dr. Granberg was educated in the Chicago Public Schools. He received his B.S. in Anthropology from Wheaton College, Wheaton, Illinois. Following four and one-half years in the Armed Forces during World War II, Dr. Granberg obtained his M.A. and Ph.D. degree in the field of psychology from the University of Chicago.

Dr. Granberg, who has been a member of the psychology department of Hope College intermittently since 1947, served for a time as Department Chairman. At Hope he was also involved in special counseling.

During an interim of six years, he served as Dean of Students and Associate Professor of Pastoral Counseling and Psychology at Fuller Seminary, Pasadena, California.

Mrs. Granberg, the former Carol Van Oss of Grand Rapids, Michigan, is a recent graduate of Hope College. The Granbergs have three daughters: Barbara, a senior at Hope College; Karen, a freshman at St. Olaf in Northfield, Minnesota; and Linda, an eighth grader at the Maurice - Orange City Community School.

Although the Granbergs arrived in Orange City around the first of September, Dr. Granberg did not assume the Office of President until November 1. This enabled him to become familiar with the college before actually assuming his duties.

Elected to a three year term on the Association Legislative Committee of the Iowa Association of Private Colleges and Universities, Dr. Granberg has already become involved in the affairs of Iowa higher education.

REFORMED CHURCH VIP's ATTEND INAUGURATION

Among the 75 delegates representing educational institutions of more than 15 states were: for Central College Mr. Arend D. Lubbers, President, and for Hope College Dr. William Vander Lugt, Distinguished Professor at Large. The Board of Education of the Reformed Church in America was represented by its Executive Secretary, Rev. Christian H. Walvoord. At the Collegiate Convocation, an address, "The Role of the Church College in American Higher Education," was presented by Dr. Irwin S. Lubbers, President of the Iowa Association of Private Colleges and Universities. Dr. Lubbers has previously served as President of both Hope and Central Colleges. Special music at both the Collegiate and Inaugural Convocation was provided by the Northwestern A Cappella Choir under the direction of Professor Lawrence Van Wyk and the Northwestern Concert Band directed by Professor Herbert Ritsema.
“THE MESSIAH”

On December 11, the Northwestern College Choirs, under the direction of Professor Lawrence Van Wyk, presented George Frederick Handel's well known Oratorio, “The Messiah.”

The chorus, which was composed of the combined A Cappella and Chapel Choirs, was accompanied by Professor Rodney Jiskoot at the organ, and Professor Herbert Ritsema at the piano. This year, instead of professional soloists, students from Northwestern's music department were chosen to sing the solo portions of the Oratorio. The soloists were Dyan Hofmeyer, Esther Koerselman, Kay Korver, Margaret Van Dyke, Janice Vander Wal, Judy Van Peursen, Carol Van Wyk, Harold Schelling, Harry Tysen, Jim Vander Velde and Dennis Van Nyhuis.

Harlen Vande Berg, presently instrumental instructor at the Rock Valley Public Schools, and a 1966 graduate of Northwestern College, performed the trumpet solo, “The Trumpet Shall Sound.”

This the third consecutive year that the choirs have presented an oratorio, having given Mendelssohn's “Elijah” in 1965 and Haydn's “The Creation” last year.

INTERNAT'L RELATIONS CLUB

The International Relations Club, in their November meeting, had as a guest speaker Dr. Yoon Bae Ouh of the Social Science Department. Dr. Ouh, a new member this year of Northwestern's faculty and co-sponsor of the IRC, discussed the present political situation in Korea and gave those present an insight as to the way the Korean people feel toward the current crisis in Southeast Asia.

SPEECH AND DRAMA

To climax the 1966 homecoming activities, the Speech and Drama Department presented Girl of the Golden West by David Belasco on October 15. The play, complete with olias and musical numbers, was directed by Dr. Theora England.

Dr. England also directed the annual children's play which was presented in six performances from November 18 to 22. This year's play, Cinderella by Charlotte Chorpenning, was presented to nearly 5,000 area school children.

Whenever there is a change in administrative responsibility, the question arises, What advances do you see and hope to see in the future of Northwestern College? Or to put it as Doctor Granberg did in his inaugural address, can we expect "twilight or the dawn of a greater day"?

If you would, think back to 1955, the year Doctor Stegenga became the president of the then Northwestern Junior College. During the eleven years of Dr. Stegenga's presidency, Northwestern developed from an academy-junior college to the status of an accredited four year college. Quite an accomplishment! Consequently, during that time, the student body has tripled in size (see graph A). To accommodate this rapid growth, the colleges physical plant has greatly expanded (3 dormitories; multi-purpose auditorium; classroom facilities, Ramaker Library, and student union); Curriculums have been completely revised and enriched; and faculty and staff has increased in size (see graph B) and quality (more faculty hold doctorate degrees, etc.).

Although the college continues to expand, it is facing a serious problem — one with which Dr. Granberg is greatly challenged by and concerned about. That is, the size of the freshman class is increasing, while the size of the graduating class is decreasing (see graph C). One reason for this is the comparatively undeveloped curriculum of some of our upper division course offerings, a legacy from our junior college days.

What then, does Dr. Granberg plan to do about this problem? His immediate concern is to involve the faculty in long range planning, designed to strengthen the curriculum.

To implement faculty recommended changes, he has indicated a concern in two areas; faculty and facilities. Regarding the faculty, he plans to continue the school's policy to encourage and assist the present faculty to complete advanced degrees. Furthermore, he continues to seek new faculty that are not only qualified as teachers and scholars but who are dedicated Christians, who regard their teaching as their particular form of Christian ministry. Regarding facilities, he points to the necessity for construction of a Chapel, as soon as possible, since present facilities are full. More dormitories and a fine arts building also are needed. In addition to the construction of these added facilities, he underscores the urgency for building up the present library holdings. "We have a splendid building, beautifully designed and equipped," he stated. "Now we must see that it houses a book collection worthy of the building."

Northwestern College needs a man like Dr. Granberg, a man that realizes the problems, a man with the desire to change, and a man that is willing to act. Therefore, I feel that the inauguration of Dr. Granberg began "the dawn of a greater day."

REFLECTIONS ON OUR NEW PRESIDENT
To fully portray the characteristic personality, Dr. Lars Granberg, who is our new college president, to someone who has not known him is akin to attempting to present an intricate and beautiful painting. Can words portray the feeling conveyed by the interplay of colors, the highlights and the form of an outstanding masterpiece? From what reference point is one to begin? How does one paint a landscape except by reference to that which is experienced? Experience can be, and usually is, the vantage point from which we describe a new experience, phenomenon, or personality. But in attempting to portray this new “personality” occupying the president’s chair, we grope for an ideal, objective standard for comparison.

In order that we may recall the characteristics which we had hoped to see exemplified in the “ideal” person who would become our new president, let us turn to criteria submitted from Northwestern’s faculty at the request of its Board of Trustees. If the most consistently mentioned criteria may be considered a consensus, then let us examine our sample by comparison to this reference. May Dr. Granberg forgive our impertinence at assuming such an approach. However, the dissection will be quite painless, requiring no anesthetics!

The faculty expressed itself first of all by stating that the new president should be a man of a real Christian commitment, with all who have4)xpressed concern for the Reformed Church background. Need more be said than that Dr. Granberg, although not born or raised in the Reformed Church, came into the Reformed Church and sought salvation as a result of a very significant spiritual experience. His commitment then, to the Christian faith, and his service in the Reformed Church is deeply rooted in a firm Christian conviction, which is closely aligned to the beliefs of the Reformed Church. How better could our president have fulfilled this criterion?

How well does he fulfill the next criterion that he have administrative experience? During his tenure at Fuller Theological Seminary Dr. Granberg was Dean of Students. Immediately before coming to Northwestern, he held the position of Acting Vice President for Academic Affairs at Hope College. He is held in high regard for his administrative ability by all who know him intimately. He is persuasive, utilizing his innate ability to “lead” rather than “shove”. As “...you will do as he wants and like it”. We have not only acquired a president with innate administrative ability but one who is able as well to provide leadership which encourages cooperation. How better could our president have fulfilled this criterion?

Another standard which had been expressed was that our new president should hold an earned doctorate. This was stated succinctly, without elaboration, presumably with the understanding that a person holding the doctorate would possess the stature and the status by which he would enjoy the respect and admiration not only of his faculty, but also of his peers in similar institutions with whom he would have to establish an intimate relationship. Not only does he fulfill this requirement—he possesses an earned doctorate with considerable exposure to psychology. Thus he is admirably equipped to understand and deal with the diverse personalities with whom he has to establish a cordial and functional relationship. Our president satisfies this criterion admirably.

An obvious attribute for a college administrator was voiced in the consensus opinion that he be of a dynamic and decisive personality. Word-of-mouth testimony from those who have had a longer working relationship with him, is that Dr. Granberg does not move impulsively or precipitously. He is known for his eagerness to tap all sources of information relating to a question or problem which is before him and then act decisively. Not only does Dr. Granberg partially receive a person’s opinion, be it relevant or not, on an important matter, but he has the capacity as well for engendering in that person a sense of importance by having contributed. The worth of the individual, student and faculty alike, is important to him and accounts in great measure for the warmth of the personality who is uniquely Dr. Granberg. Is this fulfilling a criterion? It seems almost a crass criterion. The highlight of the day’s meeting was an address by Dr. Sumner Hayward of Macalester College, St. Paul, Minnesota, who spoke on the subject “Creative Curricular Experimentation Through Cooperation”. Dr. Hayward challenged the session by stressing the many advantages which would accrue to those willing to relinquish a degree of their individuality and independence for the sake of a benefit. A few of the possible areas of cooperation cited by Dr. Hayward were exchanges of faculty by different institutions, student enrollment on other campuses in order to take advantage of particular curricular strengths, common sponsorship of conferences and summer institutes, sharing of classroom instruction through devices such as closed circuit television or video tapes and the joint sponsorship of domestic and international off-campus programs. Following the address was a discussion and interrogation by a faculty panel. Northwestern College was represented on this group by Dr. Edward Van Eck, Chairman of the Division of Natural Science.

NORTHWEST IOWA COLLEGE ASSOCIATION

The faculty and administrative officers of the Northwest Iowa College Association met on Saturday, November 19, at the Buena Vista College campus in Storm Lake. Northwestern College, with Briar Cliff and Morningide Colleges of Sioux City, Westmar College of Le Mars, and Buena Vista College are members of the Association which was organized about a year ago to implement potential areas of cooperation between the two colleges.

The highlight of the day’s meeting was an address by Dr. Sumner Hayward of Macalester College, St. Paul, Minnesota, who spoke on the subject “Creative Curricular Experimentation Through Cooperation”. At this point, the general session adjourned into divisional meetings which were held to discuss further the means by which cooperation through the corresponding divisions of the colleges might be achieved.

The developing Northwest Iowa College Association will make it possible for further cooperation for grants related to instructional facilities, cultural exchange programs, and occasional joint faculty convocations and workshops.

"And it (freedom) should eventuate in compassion, in the desire to understand, in responsible concern."

Can we fit such a person to a set of formulated criteria? Hardly! No more than we can confine the Spirit of the Living God to four walls, or to a set of formulated rules. At the risk of irreverence, we must acknowledge that the spirit that is Dr. Lars Granberg fills this criterion superbly. But far more than this, he is the spirit of a living, dynamic Christian that soars far beyond the confines of a set of "crass" criteria.

To draw again from Dr. Granberg’s address he said, "...with a greater day" under his leadership, which promises to be both exciting and rewarding.

The Northwestern Raiders wound up their 1966 Football season with a 31-27 victory over Midland College of Fremont, Nebraska.
The Raiders worked their way through a slow season winning 2 and losing 6. Northwestern dropped their opener to General Beadle and continued their slow season until they met Tarkio in the snow for the Red Raiders Homecoming. The Raiders rolled over the Owls with a final score of 30-6. The next week Northwestern dropped a close one to Concordia. The Raiders then finished out the season with a fine defensive and offensive effort that handed Midland is first Northwestern defeat in Raider history.

Even with the weak season, the Raiders managed to place middleguard, Jerry Goodale, on the first team of the All-Tri-State Conference.

Northwestern College opened its 1966 basketball season on November 26 with a victory over a strong Dakota Wesleyan team.
All prospects are pointing toward a good year for Northwestern, even with the loss of three of last years letterman; all-conference center and co-captain Dick Groenhout, co-captain Norm Prins, and four year letter winner Ron Van der Meide.
Returning starters include Dave Kleis, a 6'4" Senior and co-captain from Kalamazoo, Michigan, and Rick Vande Berg, a 6'2" 2nd team all-conference election in '66 and co-captain from Hull, Iowa. Filling in the positions vacated by graduation are Dave Sikkema, a 5'11" Sophomore from Fulton, Illinois; Darwin De Vries, the tallest man on the squad at 6'6" from Alto, Iowa; and Terry Arends, a 5'11" Junior from Hills, Minnesota. Completing the team are Gene Den Herder, a big man, 225 lbs., and fine rebounder from Sioux Center, Iowa; Erv Mellema, a good defensive player from Blomkest, Minnesota; and Corwin Smid, a substitute on last year's squad and currently serving as President of the Student Senate.

Though the Raiders are a relatively young team with two seniors, four juniors and seven sophomores, they possess the potential to duplicate, if not surpass, last year's season. Coach Muyskens says of his team, "This year's ball club is a comparatively young, hustling, good passing club, which could give a good account of itself with all opponents."
